In an era of rapid industrial and urban development in Japan, Kawase Hasui (Japanese, 1883-1957) was famous for prints of serene landscapes and waterways. Influenced by impressionism, Hasui emphasized the beauty of Japan's rural countryside, the illumination of land and water by sun and moonlight, and the changing seasons. Hasui produced over six hundred woodblock prints during his forty-year career. In 1956, he was awarded the title of Living National Treasure by the Japanese government.
